

Children Sexually Abusing

In the news in School Yards, Community Parks, Recreation Centers and Donut Shops these days we read about children or adolescent kids sexually abusing children younger than themselves and less but often, sometimes older than themselves. There is one case of a young, male teen that was arrested this past month for sexually abusing a female child and a female adult.

It is a great deal more common than one really wishes to believe. The way sex is driven into our children's heads through media, entertainment and peer pressure is it any wonder that the ages of sexual abusers perpetrators is getting younger and younger as we breathe. But that would just be far too easy to only blame society and it's vices. Much closer to the heart is the fact that sexual abusers, no matter what age have most defiantly been sexually abused at some point before they became sexual abusers.

I remember sexual abuse amongst teens and but not as often as it seems to be happening today or was it just hidden better?

As usual many of these cases of sexual abuse never hits the light as most sexual abuse cases never do. Most times the abuser uses threats of violence against the victim or their friends and family. Then even if the victim gets past those threats they go to the police and lay charges, just to get into the case and realize that the onus and battering is on the victim in the school yard and court room. Even sometimes if the pressure becomes too much the victim begins to get persecuted within their own families for causing such a disturbance in the home and their lives.

Below is some information I relieved from a friend enlightening us on what to look younger children, happening when I was in my teens

Who Are Adolescent Sex Offenders?

I. An adolescent sex offender is defined as any male or female between the ages of 12 and 17 years of age who commits any sexual act with a person of any age against the victim's will, without consent, or in an aggressive, exploitive, or threatening manner (1)

II. Adolescent sex offenders come from all socio-economic, ethno-cultural, and religious backgrounds. They also vary widely in their level of intellectual functioning, their motivation, the victims they choose, and the behaviors they commit.

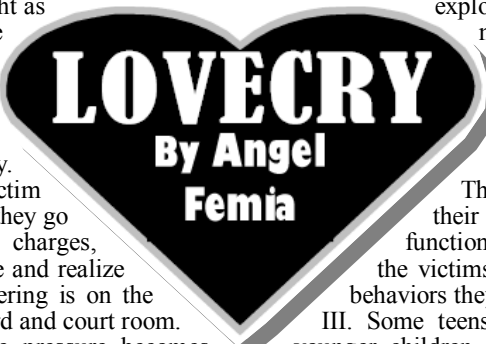

III. Some teens sexually abuse only younger children, others peer-aged victims. Some abuse only within their family. Others choose dating partners, acquaintances, strangers, and sometimes adults. Some use force or extreme violence while others trick, subtly pressure or manipulate their victims into sexual activity. Most adolescent sex offenders are known by their victims.

IV. Some teens commit only "hands-off" sexual offences such as voyeurism (peeping), exposing their private parts to others, making obscene phone calls, frontage (rubbing against others in crowded places), or fetishism (such as stealing underwear). Others commit "hands-on" sexual offences such as fondling or penetration with a penis, finger or objects.

V. Defining a behavior as being sexual assault or abuse can sometimes be difficult. It is easy to identify a sexual offence when there is a wide age gap between the teen perpetrator and the victim or the abuse involves force or penetration. But as the age gap narrows, and if the behavior involves fondling or an absence of force or aggression, it is necessary to assess it in terms of coercion, consent, or power differences.

This and That

I twisted my ankle three days ago. The first 24 hours afterwards I could barely walk. The pain is lessening as time goes on, but it still hurts somewhat and I limp when I walk. I've been trying to stay off it as much as possible. The walk up to this library is about all I dare attempt.

In a discussion board I frequent, one of the subjects being discussed is the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ". And the discussion has come to focus on the question, "Did Jesus, while He lived on earth, have Free Will?" I've been dedicating some of my online time to that board, so I've had less time for this blog.

And I do go through periods where I'm just not that interested in blogging, or feeling like I've got anything important that needs to be said at the moment. If you take a look through the archives you'll find just about everything I want to say already said. Yeah, I understand that my answer to your particular question may be hard to find, but now that my laptop is broken and I'm limited to using library computers for very limited amounts of time - as well as my occasional lack on interest in blogging - or even in being online - I'm sorry I just cannot be more of a help to people at this time.

At the shelter I'm staying, I am assigned to a "house chore" - a job I must work on the property for 24 hours per week. My assignment is to monitor the front desk of an SRO. It's an "affordable housing" apartment complex for poor and/or homeless people. Well, this past week they changed the organization of the monitors. Four of the monitors are now working 40 hours a week and are receiving a paycheck ($6 an hour) for it. The other monitor, (me), is still only scheduled 24 hours a week and is not paid - though my hours still pay for the 10 square feet of living space I have in the 250 bed dorm. Yeah, I'd say that was a bummer. And I can't get a straight answer out of the guy in charge as to why I was excluded. I'm sure it's just that I'm unworthy of such a deal. What a drag.

I'm about 1/3 the way through the 6th Harry Potter book. Although the story line doesn't seem to be as interesting as it once was, I feel an obligation to myself to finish out the series and see how it all ends.

I'm sure that's how some people feel about this blog.

Horse Manure

I finally got some work yesterday, out of the Job Office - 8 hours worth.

The job? Cleaning out horse stables.

Pine clippings are used as the bedding on the floor. It gets really wet and smelly once a horse relieves him/herself. I will get paid 7 dollars an hour for this 8 hour job. BUT... this job came to the Job Office through yet another temp agency. This means that yet another company will have its hands in my paycheck. When all is said and done, and everyone who can has skimmed off the top, I will have about $30 for my 8 hours of back breaking work. After taxes and fees and transportation to the job site... I had to pay for the bus tokens to ride the bus to the other temp agency, and that temp agency charged me again for the trip to the actual job site, so I ended up paying a total of 10 dollars for transportation yesterday. Of course a 24 hour bus pass only costs $2.50. (but if there's a chance to rip-off the lowly and low paid general labor temp worker...)

Such is the typical situation for a homeless person trying to work their way out of homelessness. No wonder so few ever make it out this way.

For most people to get out of homelessness, someone has to bail them out.

GREED—Part 6 of 18

Could it happen in America? To some analysts, it is already beginning. A survey released by the Milton S. Eisenhower Foundation attributes our enduring levels of violence to "vast and shameful inequality in income, wealth and opportunity among urban poor" who are often "trapped in places of terror" (26) - inequalities which are simply un-American, opines C. Murphy (27). Troubling studies exist, but we surround this research with technicians questioning methodology and politicians arguing the study represents no reality. There is denial: "Forget the data," asserts one newspaper columnist on poverty issues, "...things have gotten better." (28)

Finally, this issue is no longer the environmentalist's concern about scarcity of natural resources, nor the population expert's warnings about Earth's limits to growth. These scarcities are man made, the result of what people do to people. The fact is, far from being an abundant world, it is a world of scarcity because we calibrate it so.

And yet the moral connection is absent.

Currently our aggregate wealth is like a high tide, covering many unpleasant things on the ocean floor. When there is full employment, we all seem happily raised. But a few years ago the Harvard Business Review carried an article daring to look down: Richard Freeman (29) warns that under the surface America is becoming dangerously segregated, forming an apartheid economy, and the lowest are not free to move up. Freeman adds a shadow. He sketches in a huge new group of Americans, the economically sinking workers who are trailing their counterparts in other advanced countries. Sociologist Derber's point is that where people are homeless, starving, or jobless, civil society has failed (30).

But these demographics will not reverse, because we are a society busily denying its own shadow. In this essay I will pull back the curtain on the irrational in this driving, powerful economy. Instead of an overarching machinery running on smooth technical devices, we shall see a clutter of denial, rationalization, visionary statements and internal contradictions. And the quietness around this topic has another reason. Perhaps we had better be quiet. If we look up, we see Goliath.

Denying The Shadow

Unfit to TEACH? Who is? Not Me!

This is a picture of the retirement party in Nov 2003. I had to resign from permanent teaching to preserve my good standing with the York Catholic District School Board as a permanent fulltime teacher.

The school board ignored my emails in Feb 2003, about the Newly Corrupted Curriculum (Outcome Based Learning 2000), mind control, the New World Order Plans and the dangers that they involved. Since I had already suffered in the system (when I tried to implement Organics, healthy eating, natural remedies, mock exams, class reviews on tape, learning how to study and think for yourself and open minded books into the library, when employed at Holy Cross CHS from 1989 to 1995), I knew that my life would be endangered if I challenged the corruption, while employed with the school board that had caused me so much suffering for lesser reasons in the past.

The OECTA union is trying to accuse me of being unfit to teach. However due to the trauma that I experienced as a full time teacher at Holy Cross in Woodbridge in 1992 and 1995, when I challenged (principal at the time) Cosmo Modafferi's harassment, I had no choice but to resign from my permanent position and resume supply teaching after the retirement ceremony, to preserve my good standing with the board. Nevertheless, York Catholic Board has black balled me from teaching in the public school system and has accused me of quitting supply teaching

(when in reality, their attempt was to suppress this dangerous information that I presented them with while I supply taught).

OECTA would like to put me on Long Term Disability and bankrupt www.irgenius.com, and keep me under their control, since the Labour Relations ruling ordered the union to support my dispute.

That WILL NOT HAPPEN. This would be a fraudulent claim to the insurance company. I have been coerced down that road before. This time I AM STANDING ON

THE TRUTH about the serious problems that we have in our education system.

I am very healthy, fit to teach, have a clean bill of health and not on any meds. To their disadvantage, I am very aware of what is going on in the world and how we are being dangerously deceived by the Illuminati controllers.

I will

continue to fight to get the truth out, since we have no other option for survival.

See www.holyhealthy.com for details and video uploads of what is being suppressed. www.holyhealthy.com also lists government, media, law and education leaders, who have received this information and are not doing anything about the suppression, although they are ACCOUNTABLE!

We need to lift this suppression ourselves, since those in power are put their to control the agenda of the Luciferian Illuminati occultists.
